Reap the Rewards

The Environmentally Preferable Purchasing program (EPP), created by the EPA in 1993, has helped business to re-think how it can do better for itself, and the environment. By asking companies to consider environmental performance, environment over price, product safety to human health, pollution prevention, and product lifecycles in terms of creation, use, distribution and disposal, the EPA has successfully positioned its federal purchasing power to generate long-term benefits for the environment.

While green status with the EPP can improve a company's selection to perform work on the more than 1.5 million proposed federal infrastructure projects, these green principles also stimulate other benefits, such as:

- Enable construction companies to better meet their environmental goals
- Improve workers' safety, health and productivity
- Reduce liabilities
- Decrease consumption and disposal costs
- Increase the availability of EPP products in the marketplace

Paper used for this product sheet is made of 10% post-consumer content and is FSC-certified.

Many companies are discovering that a long-term, positive impact on the environment can be as simple as changing what they use in their operations and processes. Industrial Supply recognizes that need and works closely with our suppliers to find cost-effective and eco-friendly products for your workplace.
